Session 16 Recap
October 11th, Year of Our Lord 2026
Leather, Latex & Legion

Leather, Latex, and Legion

Session record: GHOST-17X
Final firsthand entry followed by reconstructed events.

We entered Noturne 13 seeking an audience with Johnny Silver Hog—the Hog Father.

Cocktails. Persuasion. A final application of intimidation. We reached the VIP section and secured our meeting.

Then 5p0r3 displayed the magebane.

Johnny recognized it. We had just announced ourselves as the marks who had killed or escaped his breach crews.

Negotiations concluded immediately.

The Hog Father cast Time Stop, froze the party, and relocated us to the dance floor. His champion, Sir Tiny, prepared an optic blast.

We were arranged for execution.

Then a portal to the Maw tore open, and Melthrax, the Unfather, ripped Sir Tiny in half.

For one very brief moment, this appeared to be an improvement.

Melthrax struck.

With the open portal feeding his assault, he devastated the party and dragged everyone closer.

The same attack killed me. Violently.

There is no clever observation attached to that entry.

My firsthand record ends there.

What follows is a reconstruction. I did not witness it.

Lorcedes answered with a volley. Rook followed with psychic daggers. Their attacks connected, but Melthrax's unnatural form resisted much of the damage.

His first full assault dropped Brook unconscious. 5p0r3's Mass Healing Word brought Brook back into the fight.

Aelyn unleashed a powerful maneuver, only for its necrotic energy to heal the creature they were trying to destroy.

I would ordinarily have something to say about that.

Aelyn had already lost me. I will leave it there.

Asra attempted to cast, but no words would leave her lips. The silence surrounding Melthrax robbed her spell of its voice, forcing her to retreat beyond the field.

The Unfather kept striking between the party's turns. Lor absorbed enough punishment that, at the beginning of her next turn, she summoned Eidolon Vale.

Vale answered with three devastating attacks and a lightning strike from the heavens.

At last, Melthrax began paying for every step forward.

5p0r3 landed a calculated Spore Lock burst, blowing a huge chunk from his form and exposing his vulnerability to radiant damage. Asra followed with repeated Disintegrate beams.

The party was tearing him apart.

Then Johnny shouted:

"I will never go back to that place!"

He unleashed a 9th-level Sunbeam across the entire dance floor, damaging everyone.

I cannot tell you what he meant by that place. Whatever it was, his fear of returning outweighed his concern for anyone caught below him.

Lor put a tether arrow into the Hog Father.

Rook seized the line and hauled him down into the melee.

His privileged view of the slaughter ended there.

But Melthrax still had enough strength to reach Lor.

He knocked her unconscious.

Then he struck her again.

Two failed death saves.

One more loss waiting to happen.

Asra finally laid the Unfather low. As his form melted out of existence, he spoke into the party's minds:

"My death is meaningless, for we are legion."

5p0r3 healed Lor and pulled her back from the brink.

That is where the account ends.

Lor was alive. Melthrax was gone.

And somewhere on that dance floor lay what was left of me.

He could afford to call his death meaningless.

I would like mine remembered.